About the Symposium

The European Symposium of Poultry Veterinary Sciences is an international scientific event dedicated to poultry veterinary medicine, bringing together European experts, diplomates and residents of the European College of Poultry Veterinary Sciences (ECPVS), along with representatives of the Romanian poultry industry. The symposium provides an interdisciplinary platform for the exchange of up-to-date knowledge on flock health, biosecurity, animal welfare, and innovations in poultry diagnostics and management.

Symposium objectives

Strengthening collaboration between academia, veterinary practice, and the poultry industry by promoting scientific dialogue, the exchange of professional experience, and the effective translation of research outcomes into avian health practice.

Symposium participants

Over 150 specialists from Romania and across Europe, including veterinarians, academic staff, researchers, and representatives of the poultry industry.

Scientific Program and Social Events

The event program includes presentations delivered by international invited speakers, scientific communications by ECPVS residents, professional networking sessions, as well as a formal dinner (Gala Dinner) organized on October 1, 2026.
